

Terence Mundy

Director, WFF

Terence Mundy is a pioneer of privately funded primary health care developments in the UK. He was one of the founders of Primary Health Care Centres and Trinity Medical Properties. He also spent time as a consultant to Brackley Investments. Terence worked closely with the UK National Health Service (NHS) at the highest level to work out ways and means of delivering modern primary health care facilities within the NHS guidelines. He was in constant consultation with the principal officers of the District Valuers department of the Inland Revenue who are guardians of the public purse and on each and every project need to be satisfied that the design and construction meet their criteria and provide best value for money.

Terence has been responsible together with his colleagues for the development of more than fifty new medical centres ranging from a small two GP unit in the far north of Scotland to units throughout the UK bringing together a number of medical practices under one roof. Each practice preserved its own identity but facilities such as minor surgery suites were shared.

Terence was a Director of MIP plc which developed some sixteen industrial estates, two major retail superstores and a major business park which was a joint venture development with a UK building society.

Prior to entering the world of business Terence was a solicitor and senior partner with the London firm of solicitors Tarlo Lyons.
